Managing Director, Daniel Newton, was invited to the High Growth Peer Network by a very well respected colleague who felt that the network could benefit the business. Being very busy at the time, Daniel was sceptical about just how useful it would be, and if time would be better spent elsewhere. After attending the first network group, although Daniel could see the positives in networking with other company leaders, he was still unsure as to how the participants could help each other, with each business being from very different sectors.

However, over the coming months Daniel got to know each of the group members extremely well and has created some excellent relationships. The wide range of business types, sizes and sectors has provided a refreshing insight to how leaders deal with common problems in different ways, which has been very useful during the pandemic.

Key Points

I leave the Peer Network group armed with fresh ideas on how to continue to improve our business, with an extended network of colleagues and friends. I have already done business with one of the network members and I know others have too. It's fantastic to see local business helping each other during what has been a strange and challenging post Brexit and now Covid period. I would recommend the initiative to anyone, whether their challenges are day to day or strategic.
